cost-is-limited-by-subsidy ===== chimpfish When used to define an entity and then used to describe an entity, the same problem exists. From co...: _" more than is needed for something to be comfortable_ " ----- jeffool It's interesting to look at that article and see how it keeps mentioning these families instead of individuals, while they've only named two females and one male as having these roles. (To be fair, it's not a few, it's the only two, and is sort of a different thing, but still.) ju-st First of all, the article makes no mention of the companies involved with the concerts, in fact it mentions no companies other than ACM. The author is describing a Concert Manager and Orchestra Manager in the context of the ACM. Second, having been involved with the ACM as a DJ for several years I can assure you that the jobs are extremely open and constantly evolving. Finally, as a person who has been hired as a composer in the past for a possible ACM, I can tell you that it is incredibly difficult to land these jobs. There are several reputable agencies that deal with them and it is anything but an easy process. Even with the promise of a successful audition, the problem is that it takes months to get back to you. I had gotten over 200 rejections before landing a placement as a composer. nashtgc Sounds good to me. Google's Maps app for Android now has an option to tell you the traffic in the surrounding area. No, it doesn't really help, but we like the idea of traffic updates for places we don't know very well. See, if you're going to a place we don't know much about, there are a lot of things to consider — like what the traffic is like, where you'll have to stop to get gas, or if you need to change lanes at a light.
