CI: THE DARK STAIR

Image - The Dark Stair

A steep, narrow stair leads down into the darkness. Obviously of great age the steps are worn as if trod by countless feet. The dust of ages lies thickly here and occasional torch sconces reminiscent of a bloody skeletal hand pierce the walls to both left and right. Lurid carvings in the wall depict a soul's descent to the underworld.

Zana: Well then, this sounds like the perfect place to go exploring.

Zana: I wonder what arcane knowledge is left to be discovered

This stairway connects Sehvain's town of the Death God's temple buried far in the desert, unless the PCs are following upon reaching the antechamber below prays to his dark patron. Thus, he is not hear anyone following him unless amount of noise or bring a lot of light.

STEEP STAIR:

Characters moving up the stairs must succeed on a DC 10 Balance check upon entering the first steep stair square. Characters who fail, stumble, and end their move 1d2x5 feet later. Characters that fall by 5 or more take 1d6 points of damage, and fall prone in the square in which they end their movement. While on the stairs, a character gets a +1 bonus on melee attack rolls against creatures below him.

LURID CARVINGS:

The carvings on the wall depict a soul's descent into the underworld. At the top of the stair they show a dying man lying in his bed surrounded by grieving relatives. As the stairs descend they show the man's soul sinking down through the earth and journeying to the underworld. The carvings show a mighty river, massive
